

Anonymising manuscripts

Cultural Sociology uses double-blind peer review, which requires that manuscripts be fully anonymised. If manuscripts contain any identifying information when they are submitted, they have to be corrected before they can be sent out for review. This slows down the reviewing process. To avoid delays, please follow these guidelines:

- Remove all mentions of author name(s) and institutional affiliation(s) from the paper (including page headers).
- Make sure to remove identifying information from the footnotes and acknowledgements (including of sources of funding).
- Avoid phrasing in which you refer to previously-published work that you have authored. (For example: “Elsewhere I have argued....”).
- If you must refer to your own work in a way that reveals your authorship, replace your name in the text with “Author”. (For example: “...as demonstrated in previous work (Author 2010).”) In the case of multiple authors, create a series as appropriate (“Author A”, “Author B” and so on).
- Check the reference list to make sure that author references are removed. If you were unable to avoid referring to your own work in the paper, these citations should appear at the beginning of the reference list as “Author Citation” with the date of publication. (For example: Author Citation. (2010)).
