

SPECIAL ISSUE CALL FOR PAPERS

Journal of HUMAN LACTATION

Impact Factor: 2.233

The top-ranked breastfeeding journal

Source: 2016 Release of Journal Citation Reports with Source: 2015 Web of Science Data

Editor-in-Chief:

Joan E. Dodgson, Ph.D., MPH, RN, FAAN
School of Nursing, Saint Louis University

Call for Papers: May 2018 Issue on Lactation and Social Justice

Increasingly breastfeeding is being viewed through a social justice lens, which approaches lactation as a human rights issue. The current unequal distribution of lactation services worldwide perpetuates breastfeeding inequities, along with significant reductions in human health due to lack of adequate lactation assistance.

From the social justice perspective, lactation support and services are a routine and required part of care for all families, including those who work, refugees, people who are incarcerated, transgender parents, and all who choose to breastfeed, chestfeed, or provide expressed human milk for their infants or young children.

For this issue of JHL, we are seeking manuscripts that address these and all social justice issues within the field of lactation. Manuscripts focusing on the local, regional, or global level are welcome. We are looking for an array of multi-disciplinary approaches from many perspectives, including program planning, interventions, and policy. We are seeking research manuscripts, as well as Insights into Practice, Insights into Policy and commentaries.

Direct questions to Dr. Joan Dodgson at jhleditorinchief@gmail.com.

Manuscripts due: 1 December 2017

Visit the JHL website for 2017 Author Guidelines.

journals.sagepub.com/home/jhl

Official Journal of the International Lactation Consultant Association®

www.ilca.org

Submit your manuscript online at <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/jhl>