Language and Literature: Special Issue Guidelines

A special issue is a thematic collection of articles, guest-edited by an academic who is not a part of the Language and Literature core editorial team. There are four issues of Language and Literature per year and one of these is usually a special issue. The special issue is usually published in February and typically contains 5-7 articles, plus book reviews (N.B. the special issue editor is responsible only for articles, not reviews).

If you have an idea for a special issue, you are advised to first of all discuss this with the editor, Dan McIntyre.

Sourcing potential articles

If your idea is accepted in principle by the Language and Literature editor, there are two possible ways to proceed:

Route 1: Open Call
You write a call for article proposals for your prospective special issue. Article proposals should be in the form of abstracts of 300-500 words. Your call should explain the theme of your special issue. Abstracts should summarise research questions posed, data studied, methods applied, and findings. Of the proposals you receive, it is your decision which to include in your special issue proposal. This proposal will then be reviewed by the Language and Literature editor and assistant editors.

Route 2: Commission
Unlike the open call option, this route requires you to identify potential authors and approach them directly. Our experience is that this route makes for a smoother path to publication. As with Route 1, potential authors should provide you with an abstract for the article they intend to write, including details of research questions posed, data studied, methods applied, and findings.

Regardless of which route you take, you should not at this stage promise authors publication, since this is dependent on (i) your special issue proposal being accepted and (ii) successful peer-review of its constituent articles.

Putting together a proposal
Your proposal for a special issue should include the following:

1. Outline of theme (300-500 words)
2. Rationale (300-500 words outlining why a special issue on this topic will be of interest to readers of Language and Literature)
3. Biographical details of special issue editor(s) (100-200 words each, including details of previous editorial experience)
4. Abstracts of proposed articles (300-500 words each, plus keywords and references)
5. Biographical details of prospective authors (100-150 words each)
6. Timescale for delivery of first drafts of articles

N.B. We advise including more articles than you think you will need in your proposal. This is because it is likely that some authors will drop out during the review process, while some articles may ultimately be judged not to be of publishable standard. If all your authors submit and pass peer-review, we will publish any articles that do not fit in the special issue in a standard issue of the journal.

You should email your completed proposal to Dan McIntyre: d.mcintyre@hud.ac.uk.

What happens next?
Your proposal will be reviewed by the Language and Literature editor and assistant editors. The criteria we will use for evaluating your proposal are as follows:

- Is there a clear theme for the proposed special issue?
- Is the theme original?
- How persuasive is the rationale for the special issue?
- Is there a good range of articles proposed?
- Is there a good range of authors? (e.g. consider such variables as gender, early career researcher, established researcher, etc.)
- Does the special issue editor/editorial team have experience of editorial work? (N.B. It is not an absolute requirement to have previous editorial experience, so long as your proposal is strong and you show evidence of being able to manage a project of this kind. If you are new to editing, you may find it useful to team up with someone more experienced in this area).
- How likely is it that the proposed special issue can be delivered within the timeframe? (e.g. Is there any cause for concern with regard to the delivery of particular articles?)

We will aim to give you a response to your proposal within two weeks. Our response will be one of the following:

- Proposal accepted
- Revise and resubmit proposal
- Proposal rejected

If you are asked to revise and resubmit your proposal, we will provide feedback on what precisely needs to be added/expanded. If your proposal is accepted, you are then responsible for overseeing and delivering the manuscript of the special issue.

Your responsibilities
As editor of the special issue, you are responsible for:
• Ensuring that articles have not been published before (either in full or in part).
• Initial feedback to authors on first drafts.
• Ensuring that articles adhere to the Language and Literature formatting standards (https://uk.sagepub.com/en-gb/eur/manuscript-submission-guidelines#PreparingYourManuscript) and referencing guidelines (https://uk.sagepub.com/sites/default/files/sage_harvard_reference_style_0.pdf). (N.B. We reserve the right to return articles to you that do not meet these standards; please note that this may substantially delay publication of your special issue).
• Ensuring that authors have secured any necessary permissions for the reproduction of copyright text or images (see https://uk.sagepub.com/en-gb/eur/copyright-and-permissions for details).
• Delivering the final manuscript of the special issue to the Language and Literature editor.

External peer-review of the articles will be arranged by the Language and Literature editor. Submission of articles and the final manuscript should be via email.

Timescale

The February issue of Language and Literature is designated for special issues. This means the editor needs to deliver the complete manuscript to SAGE by 30 November of the preceding year. For this to happen, we need to see the complete manuscript of the issue by 31 October. The following is a typical timescale.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Action</th>
<th>Responsibility</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>28 February</td>
<td>Authors submit first drafts to special issue editor(s)</td>
<td>Authors</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 March</td>
<td>First drafts reviewed and checked for consistency with L&amp;L stylesheets</td>
<td>Special issue editor(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 April</td>
<td>Feedback to authors on first drafts</td>
<td>Special issue editor(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 May</td>
<td>Authors submit second drafts to special issue editor(s)</td>
<td>Authors</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31 May*</td>
<td>Second drafts sent to L&amp;L editor</td>
<td>Special issue editor(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 June*</td>
<td>Second drafts sent out for external review</td>
<td>L&amp;L editor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30 July*</td>
<td>Feedback to authors on second drafts</td>
<td>L&amp;L editor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31 October*</td>
<td>Complete ms delivered to L&amp;L editor</td>
<td>Special issue editor(s)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30 November*</td>
<td>Complete ms delivered to SAGE</td>
<td>L&amp;L editor</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* Non-negotiable deadlines

Authors will receive proofs of their articles sometime between beginning of December and mid-January. Proofs should be turned around within one week.