SAS accepts both conceptual and empirical papers, with quantitative, qualitative, and mixed method approaches. The journal also carries book reviews of recently-published literature that fit with the scope of the journal. Authors are welcome to submit the electronic version of their article to the journal's submission site. SAS operates on a double-blind peer review system. Papers submitted should represent original research, not published or under review elsewhere. The preliminary decision is communicated within 45 days of submission.

About the Journal

South Asian Survey (SAS) is a bi-annual refereed scholarly journal published by SAGE, which provides a forum for research articles exhibiting in-depth understanding of issues relating to South Asian economy, history, culture, inter-regional trade, public policy, diplomacy, and contemporary businesses. The journal encourages research articles that engage in nuanced discussion of topics, in order to bring together some fine thinking from around the world on South Asian issues that hold relevance for academicians and practitioners alike. SAS also encourages submissions that focus on social sector issues, insights from different industry segments, impact of governance on business and bi-lateral trade decisions. The journal debates on issues of national and regional concern, primarily from the perspectives of politics, economics, and international relations, but also draws on insights from the fields of management, culture, history, and media and communication. SAS is indexed with, among others, J-gate, EBSCO, Scimago, ICI, and ProQuest.
