

Progress in Development Studies is looking for a new associate editor to join their team from 1st January 2021. We are looking for a dynamic researcher with a publishing in development studies. Ideally, we are seeking a political scientist able to assess both macro and micro political analysis, as well as quantitative and qualitative politics contributions. We would welcome regional expertise in Sub-Saharan Africa, South-East Asia and/or East Asia. We particularly welcome expressions of interest from academics from, or based in, the Global South.

We publish empirical, theoretical and review articles that advance current debates in international development. We define development as change, whether positive or negative. Our scope is not restricted to development policy and interventions and where these are examined, they must be critically contextualised in wider processes of development. Whilst most contributions focus on developing countries, we also carry work that focuses on problems of development in the Global North. You can find more information about the journal at <https://journals.sagepub.com/home/pdj>.

Expressions of interest are invited by 6th December 2020 and should be sent to c.locke@uea.ac.uk along with an academic CV.
